DON MILLER TRAINS TRADERS WHILE DOING GOOD
*PROCEEDS OF TRAINING SESSIONS BENEFIT THE AMERICAN DIABETES ASSOCIATION

BOSTON, October 1, 2009 – In 2008, Don Miller conquered the financial markets as his 214% private fund return beat that of assets managed by the world's top public Commodity Trading Advisors. This summer, Don embarked on a mission to transfer his knowledge by training others to become self-sufficient in the markets by pairing his desire to elevate the professionalism of his industry with his desire to find a cure for diabetes.

As a result, Don launched project "Jellie" in the summer of 2009 with the intent of providing one of the most intensive group trading educational efforts ever experienced. "Jellie" is short for Jellyfish, which reflect creatures that must adapt to the current in order to survive, as well as "sting or be stung". The initial Jellie team included twenty traders from various walks of life around the world, including a broadcaster and former NFL quarterback, a photographer, psychologist, engineer, software developer, real estate broker, professional tennis player and others.

As a part of the intense eight-week live market training effort, Don included and recorded sixteen hours of seminar training that others could also view (available at www.donmillereducation.com), while committing to donate 15% of the initial course revenue to the American Diabetes Association. As a result of his efforts and wide industry support, Don recently presented Chris Boynton, Executive Director of the Eastern New England Area of the American Diabetes Association, with an initial check for over $11,000 to support their education, patient support and research efforts.

Don's personal connection to diabetes comes through his daughter Chelsea, a senior at Dennis Yarmouth Regional High School. Chelsea was diagnosed with Type 1, insulin-dependent diabetes at the age of ten. And while she and her family had to make some adjustments, diabetes hasn't gotten in the way of Chelsea's full participation in cross country, track and violin. Don and his wife Debra recognized that Chelsea is just one of millions of children and adults impacted by diabetes every day.

Don's training helped the Jellies adapt to the up and down world of trading, and his contribution to the American Diabetes Association will help others adapt to the up and down life-long journey of diabetes.

About Jellyfish Enterprises LLC

Jellyfish Enterprises LLC is an educational firm based in South Yarmouth, MA focused on providing quality training to electronic futures traders. Don Miller established the firm in 2009 to respond to a growing industry need for quality instruction in markets that are more dynamic and challenging than ever. The firm's objective is to create self-sufficient traders and investors who can successfully interpret markets without having to rely on external managers or "gurus". Don has actively mentored hundreds of traders around the world on the technical and psychological aspects of trading, and his market insights have been published in multiple industry magazines and websites. Don has a summa cum laude BSBA degree from Bryant College and Executive MBA from the University of Wisconsin.
